

The Office of the Multi-County Public Defender
104 Marietta Street, Suite 200
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Introduction

This analysis of death penalty cases has been prepared using the data collected by the Multi-County Public Defender Office since its inception in July, 1992. The Multi-County Public Defender Office was created in 1992 as a result of the cooperation between the Georgia General Assembly and the Georgia Supreme Court. The legislation which created the Office provides that the Multi-County Public Defender shall serve all counties of the state.

Since 1992, the staff attorneys of the Multi-County Public Defender Office have served as lead or co-counsel in more than one hundred death penalty cases at the trial and appellate stages. In addition, those staff attorneys and mitigation specialists have assisted in resolving more than one hundred and fifty death penalty cases through negotiated plea agreements in over ninety different counties. The Office provides assistance in death penalty cases by: (1) providing training and assistance to attorneys who have been appointed to defend defendants charged with a capital offense; (2) serving as co-counsel to assist local appointed lead counsel in the trial and direct appeal of cases involving defendants facing the death penalty; (3) accepting appointments to provide direct representation as lead counsel in death penalty cases based upon the circumstances of each individual case.

The creation of the Multi-County Public Defender Office was the fruition of long sought recognition by the Georgia General Assembly that indigent defense in the area of capital litigation is unique because the burden placed upon the defense lawyer in a capital trial is unparalleled in the practice of law. The purpose of this death penalty case analysis is provide a historical and contextual basis for the implementation of the provisions of House Bill Number 770. Pursuant to HB 770, the Multi-County Public Defender Office will become Office of the Georgia Capital Defender on January 1, 2005. On that date, the Office of the Georgia Capital Defender will “undertake the defense of all indigent persons charged with a capital felony for which the death penalty is being sought in any court” in the State of Georgia.

The Modern Death Penalty in Georgia¹

In the spring of 1973, American planes had just completed another massive bombing of North Vietnam while peace negotiators were arguing over the shape of their conference table in Paris. President Nixon was entangled in the Watergate cover-up that would eventually lead to his resignation. As the nation approached its bicentennial the American Indian Movement occupied government facilities at Wounded Knee, South Dakota, as part of their protest of the theft of Native American lands by European Americans. Many Georgians were flocking to theaters to be shocked by Linda Blair's performance in the movie "The Exorcist." Other Georgians were going to the theater to watch Barbra Streisand and Robert Redford in the nostalgic movie "The Way We Were." John Denver's "Rocky Mountain High," was climbing the charts on its way to becoming the year's best album. Bill Walton and the UCLA Bruins were completing the year's "March Madness" by defeating Memphis State and becoming the NCAA's 1973 college basketball champions.

Georgia's own version of 1973's March Madness had begun with the convening of the 1973 Georgia General Assembly during the first weeks of January. In response to decisions by the United States Supreme Court which declared Georgia's death penalty statutes unconstitutional, Representative Peyton Hawes from Atlanta and Representative Wayne Snow (Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee) from Chickamauga introduced House Bill Number 12 calling for the imposition of the death penalty in certain cases and providing procedures for carrying out the death penalty in Georgia.

House Bill Number 12's trip to the floor of the Georgia General Assembly in January 1973 actually began in August, 1967 with the arrest of William Henry Furman in Chatham County, Georgia. Mr. Furman was charged with shooting to death a Chatham County homeowner during a botched burglary. Following a brief jury trial, Superior Court Judge Harrison Dunbar, Jr. sentenced Mr. Furman to die in Georgia's electric chair. Mr. Furman appealed his death sentence to the Supreme Court of Georgia. He raised several issues about the conduct of his trial and also argued that the death penalty statute in Georgia violated the Constitution of the United States. On April 24, 1969, Chief Justice Duckworth, writing for a unanimous Court, summarily disposed of Mr. Furman's constitutional challenge to Georgia's death penalty statute with one sentence: "[T]he statutes of this State authorizing capital punishment have repeatedly been held not to be cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Constitution."

William Henry Furman was joined in his constitutional challenge to Georgia's death penalty statutes by Lucius Jackson, another defendant from Chatham County. Mr. Jackson had also been tried in Judge Dunbar's courtroom and convicted of the offense of rape. Because the jury had failed to recommend mercy, under Georgia's death penalty statutes at that time, Mr. Jackson received a mandatory and automatic sentence of death. Like Mr. Furman, Mr. Jackson appealed his death sentence to Georgia's Supreme Court and, he too, challenged the constitutionality of the death penalty statute. On December 4, 1969, Justice Felton, writing for a unanimous Supreme Court of Georgia, held that Georgia's legislation, mandating death for the offense of rape if there were no recommendation of mercy, was constitutional. Justice Felton wrote

[Georgia's death penalty legislation] is not subject to the constitutional attacks [on the basis] that [the legislation] violates the Eighth and the Fourteenth Amendments to the Federal Constitution by simultaneously submitting the issues of guilt and punishment to the same jury and imposing the death penalty on one convicted for rape.

Justice Felton further asserted

[t]here was no evidence to support the contention that there exists a discriminatory pattern whereby the death penalty is consistently imposed upon Negro defendants convicted of raping white women.

Mr. Furman and Mr. Jackson appealed to the United States Supreme Court which consolidated the two Georgia cases with an appeal from Texas. Representing the State of Georgia before the United States Supreme Court was former Court of Appeals Judge Dorothy T. Beasley, who, at that time, was an Assistant Attorney General for the State of Georgia. Justices Douglas, Brennan, Stewart, White and Marshall all wrote separate opinions in support of holding that the death penalty statutes in Georgia and Texas were unconstitutional; Justices Burger, Blackmun, Powell, and Rehnquist wrote separate opinions in which they argued that the death penalty statutes did not violate the United States Constitution.

Justice Brennan agreed with Justice Marshall's analysis that the Eighth Amendment's prohibition against "cruel and unusual punishment" made the death penalty unconstitutional. However, the three remaining justices who were willing to declare the death penalty statutes in Georgia and Texas unconstitutional did so for other reasons. Therefore, there was no majority opinion which would have absolutely forbidden the use of the death penalty. As Justice Burger stated in his dissenting opinion

[T]oday, the Court has not ruled that capital punishment is per se violative of the Eighth Amendment; nor has it ruled that the punishment is barred for any particular class or classes of crimes. The substantially similar concurring opinions of Mr. Justice Stewart and Mr. Justice White, which are necessary to support the judgment setting aside petitioners' sentences, stop short of reaching the ultimate question. The actual scope of the Court's ruling, which I take to be embodied in these concurring opinions, is not entirely clear. This much, however seems apparent: if the legislatures are to continue to authorize capital punishment for some crimes, juries and judges can no longer be permitted to make the sentencing determination in the same manner they have in the past.

With that direction from the dissenters on the U.S. Supreme Court, the members of the Georgia General Assembly had seven months to devise a new death penalty statute. On Wednesday afternoon, March 28, 1973, without ceremony or fanfare, Governor Jimmy Carter signed Georgia's modern death penalty law and thus began Georgia's modern-day leadership in the development of state-sponsored executions.
